Safari Being one of the fastest browsers on the market, Safari provides shortcuts that make it easier for users to quickly navigate. Safari's Intelligent Links feature can be used to perform automatic redirection. Here is a list of the possible redirection scenarios: Web pages on the same domain (i.e., are served using the same URL, but with a different path. Same web pages, but with different context, path, or query string. When the user wants to jump to a webpage with a specific domain or extension, the user will receive a warning message that a webpage has been redirected to another web page. It is possible to complete the ongoing action without losing the submitted data. You have the ability to add a third party app to the list of exceptions. If an automatic redirection goes through the use of this feature and if the user intends to bypass it, all the apps, extensions, and more will be automatically added to the bypass list, which means that they will be skipped. The bypass apps, extensions, and other utilities are clearly listed in the Safari view menu when you wish to use this feature. You can also use the settings menu, which is located in the Safari settings of your macOS device, to modify the redirection behavior of Safari. If you are not a fan of Safari Intelligent Links, you can turn it off in the Safari options menu. HTTP F.A.Q. How do web pages redirect? When accessing a webpage, the main page is loaded first. If a user fills out the form on the page, the browser would perform an action and, if a redirection link is available, it will go to the new page that has the form's contents. The new page has the same URL as the original one, but with a different path. In order to redirect the user to the new page, the site owner will place a piece of JavaScript or a redirect link inside the form. The browser will recognize that the page has been redirected and will load the new page. If a visitor wants to follow the redirect link, the user is automatically redirected to the new page as well. Why would a site redirect users to another page? The main purpose of a redirect is to shorten the link. Site owners place it in content that already
